Carol Gray

I graduated from the University of Glasgow veterinary school in Scotland. I worked in several small animal practices in England, including in charity clinics, for several years. I spent six years as a partner in a two-person small animal practice in London. I was appointed as the first lecturer in veterinary communication skills at the University of Liverpool veterinary school in 2003, and spent the next 12 years teaching undergraduate and postgraduate veterinarians. I also coordinate "NUVACS", the international collaboration for teaching veterinary communication skills. While at Liverpool, I completed a Masters in Medical Ethics and Law, which developed my interest in the topic of consent to veterinary treatment of animal patients. I received funding to start a full-time PhD in this subject at the University of Birmingham in 2015. I am currently in the final year of my doctorate.
